Town of Oxford – The Beginnings ⁴

No formal act of incorporation of Oxford has been found. Its first mention was on May 31, 1693 when “Daniel Allen of Oxford” was chosen representative to the General Court. The site of the town is near the middle of the territory known as “Nipmuck”, “Nipmug” or Nepmug Country”. The first movements towards a settlement in this section was made in February 1680.

On May 11, 1681, the General Court empowered William Stoughton and Joseph Dudley to inspect “the matter of the land” and inquire into the validity of the Indian titles. Acting under the authority of the Court, these gentlemen later purchased certain Indian lands and the deeds of conveyance, dated February 19, 1681 – 1682, were presented to the Court on May 27, 1682, and by it confirmed. History states that this grant was ratified to Dudley & Company on January 11, 1688. The place was named Oxford after the city of that name in England. The plan comprehended about 65 square miles, including besides the present Oxford, the larger part of Charlton, about one-fourth of Auburn, one-fifth of Dudley and several square miles of the northeasterly portion of Southbridge. On December 8, 1731, the farms of Josiah and Theodore Kingsbury and adjoining land of Isaac Larned were annexed to Oxford. When Dudley was incorporated on February 2, 1732, a part of Oxford was included. On November 22, 1734, on petition of the town, Dudley’s farm was annexed to Oxford. On November 21, 1754, the district of Charlton was established, which took from Oxford all of the original grant lying west of a line one mile west of the “Village line”. On June 23, 1773, certain families were “erected into a precinct” called the South Parish of Worcester, and the district became the town of Ward on April 10, 1778 (now Auburn). On January 9, 1789, the estates of Isaac Moffit and two others were annexed to Oxford from Charlton. On February 18, 1793, a part of Sutton was annexed. On February 6, 1807, the Oxford South Gore was annexed, but was later included in the town of Webster, incorporated March 6, 1832. On February 13, 1809 twenty-six acres belonging to Amasa Kingsbury were annexed. On March 22, 1838, “the Oxford North Gore”, comprising 738 acres, was annexed; this lay between the north line of Oxford, as it then existed, and the Leicester south line.
